

Fireweed – English Homework

This term, our class book is Fireweed by Jill Paton Walsh.

Bill and Julie meet each other in a chance encounter at Aldwych underground where they are sheltering during an air raid in 1940. Both are runaway evacuees who have returned to their home city: London. They don't see it as dangerous and they want to stay there. But, this means they have to live without adults, without ration books, and without a place to stay. Their best chance of survival, literally and as independent children, is to pair up and become a team.

We will be exploring the characters, settings and themes this term and so for your homework, I would like you to find out a bit more about children evacuees in World War II.

Read through the information I have given you and then write your own letter home to your parents. Use the planning boxes to help you.

Fireweed – English Homework

This term, our class book is Fireweed by Jill Paton Walsh.

Bill and Julie meet each other in a chance encounter at Aldwych underground where they are sheltering during an air raid in 1940. Both are runaway evacuees who have returned to their home city: London. They don't see it as dangerous and they want to stay there. But, this means they have to live without adults, without ration books, and without a place to stay. Their best chance of survival, literally and as independent children, is to pair up and become a team.

We will be exploring the characters, settings and themes this term and so for your homework, I would like you to find out a bit more about children evacuees in World War II.

Read through the information I have given you and then write your own letter home to your parents. Use the planning boxes to help you.